Ghost Hunt

Do you believe in ghosts? Three brave New Zealanders are about to find out if they are cynics or believers. They put their fears aside while exploring New Zealand's haunted sites.

EACH WEEK, the Ghost Hunt team use a combination of technological gadgets and old fashioned bravado in their pursuit of paranormal activity. They explore a number of spooky locations, including an abandoned psychiatric hospital, the Waitomo Caves Hotel, Riccarton House in Christchurch, Vulcan Hotel in St Bathans, St James Theatre in Wellington and Kinder House in Parnell.

It's a frightening tour and no-one knows this better than host Carolyn Taylor. Since filming began on Ghost Hunt, Taylor has started sleeping with her light on. "I didn't want to go into each and every location," Taylor laughs. "I was so scared on every shoot, it's a feeling you just can't get used to!"

The 24-year-old found certain sites scarier than others. During filming in Dunedin, Taylor was forced into a deserted Larnach Castle in the middle of the night, just as fog was enveloping the property. "It did my head in a bit," she says. "It was an old place with such a morbid history."

The cast has one message for the cynics: "Everyone is allowed their opinion, but whether or not you believe, you certainly can't say that the unknown doesn't exist!"
